PROFILE

Web development has always been an interest of mine, starting from a young age when I would edit HTML on my Tumblr account. After university, I spent time working in the banking and finance industries. I was not satisfied with my career path and decided to pursue web development due to my passions for technology, creativity and satisfaction from problem-solving. I attended BrainStation's web development program where I learned the necessary skills to work as a developer. I am currently looking for employment opportunities where I can demonstrate my skills, build new skills, and contribute to the company's success through building web applications.
